

Cybersecurity and Data Protection

Whether you are compiling data protection procedures, reviewing current practices or managing a claim, we have a team of specialists who can advise you.

Carey Olsen is one of the only offshore law firms to offer focussed contentious and non-contentious data protection and information management services. Our experts regularly advise clients on local legislation governing the collection, processing and storage of data on customers, staff and suppliers to achieve a secure data management framework that complies with the law.

“Their advice is delivered in simple, easy-to-understand language and always within a broader commercial context.”

Legal 500

Clients value our active role in shaping new legislation in these specialist areas. We regularly advise clients on data protection and cybersecurity issues including: international data transfers, data mapping and pseudonymisation issues, the use of static IP addresses as identifiers, policies and terms and conditions of business, cookie usage, electronic marketing, GDPR and Privacy Shield and the use of technology and its implications.

We also regularly advise on document retention, subject access requests, disclosure and information management issues.

Our lawyers are at the forefront of developments affecting this sector and work closely with industry bodies and associations in shaping the statutory and regulatory frameworks relating to Data Protection and Cybersecurity. We also offer in-house training programmes and have published The Channel Islands General Data Protection Regulation guide which is available on request.
