

THE OFFICE OF THE DATA PROTECTION COMMISSIONER

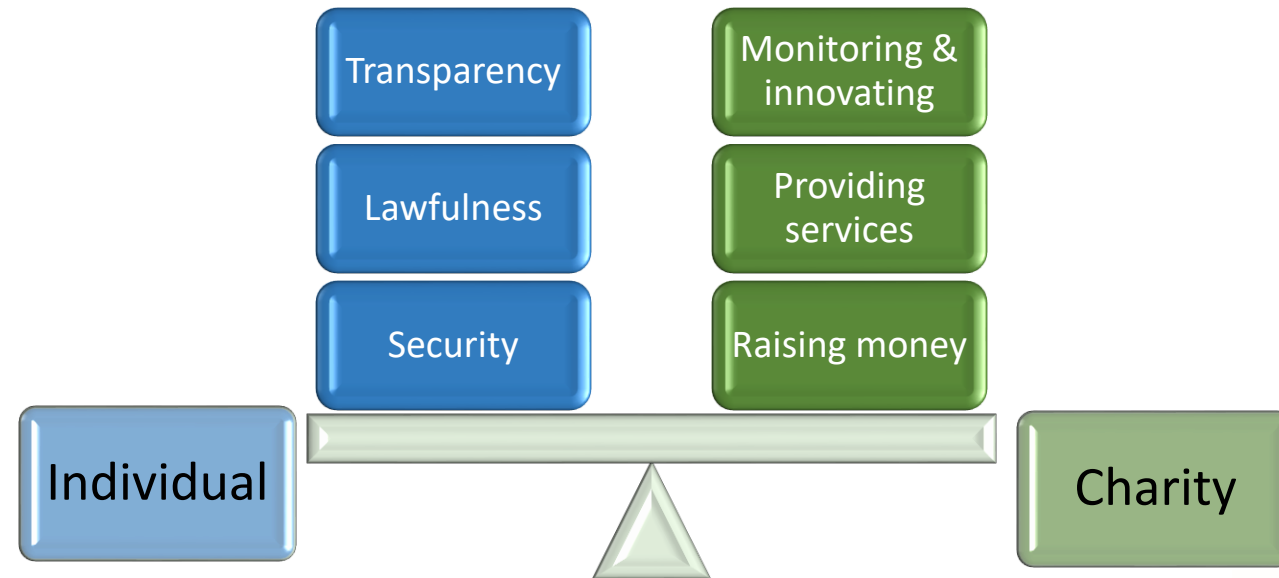

Data Protection Reform

Rachel Masterton

Deputy Data Protection Commissioner

What is Data Protection?

- Data protection governs how personal data is collected, used, stored, disclosed and destroyed
- Serves to balance rights & expectations of individuals for personal data to be safeguarded against legitimate activities of organisations, including charities

Data Protection reform – why?

- In response to changes in technology & the reach of digital goods & services
- Provides a framework to regulate ‘big data’ & adapts burden of regulation to match size of organisation & risks associated with the processing
- Provides individuals with more rights & strengthens existing rights

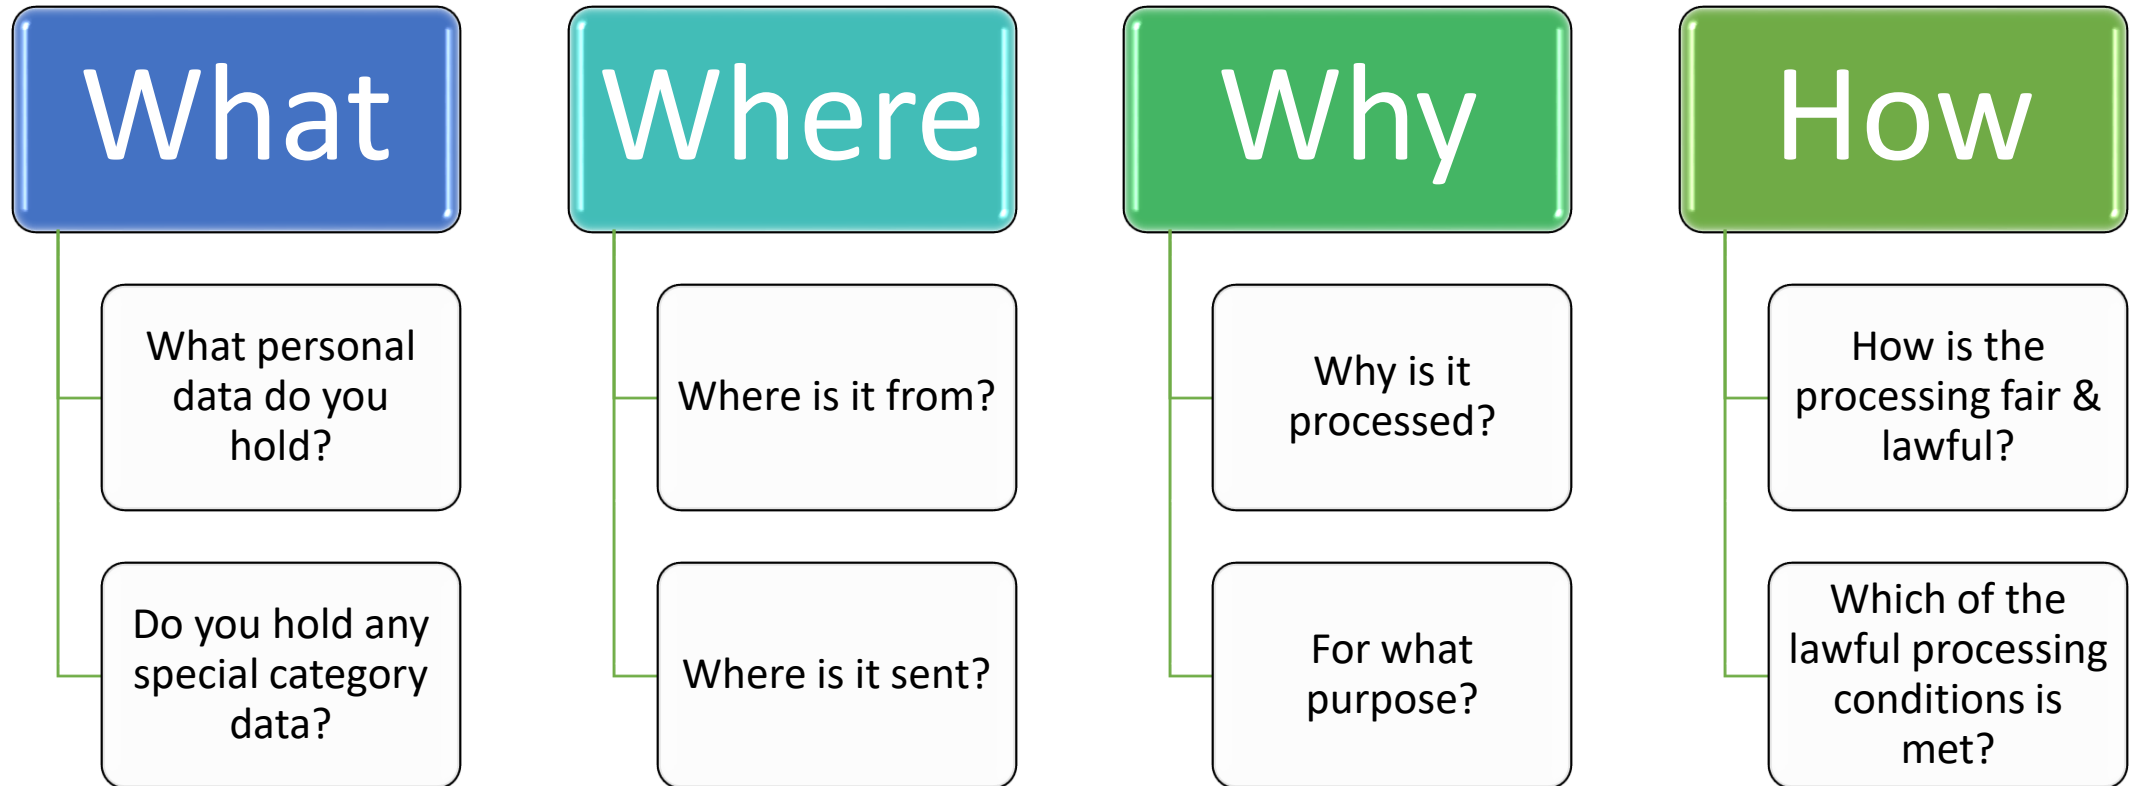

How reform affects charities?

- Charities will need to be accountable for compliance with the new legislation & should be able to demonstrate this
- Charities will need to understand what they do with personal data, why they do it and what safeguards they have in place
- Measures in new legislation build on the existing 8 principles, redefine terms & introduce new provisions

What should be done now?
